

INTRODUCTION

To many of the Middle Eastern nations there is of course no need for either recipes or introductions for Bulgor has been their main stay of diet for many Centuries. We have two purposes in presenting this booklet to the Canadian public. Our first objective is to help Canadian farmers and the Government in their efforts to reduce the country's wheat surplus, this we hope to do by converting a part of our surplus wheat into Bulgor and offering it to the public with the help of this recipe booklet. Secondly; because there is a generation of Canadians who like to venture beyond the beaten path of known taste and try the eating habits of other nations, we wish to share our way of cooking some recipes with these Canadians.

These recipes are not only exotic and different but are beneficial to health and simple to prepare. There are no ingredients which are difficult to find. Anyone who likes to cook can always better a recipe that has been passed on to her. So, some of the seasonings mentioned may be omitted or used in lesser quantities according to individual tastes.

In some of the recipes included here, cooked Bulgor is listed as an ingredient. The simple recipe below can be used to make cooked Bulgor from the dry Bulgor Wheat. Usually cooking is the part of the preparation of the soup, entrée or other dish served warm.

HOW TO COOK BULGOR (makes 2½ cups)

Combine in a saucepan:	1	cup dry Bulgor wheat
	1-2/3	cups water
	1/4	teaspoon salt

Bring to boil, cover, reduce heat, and simmer until water is absorbed.

We hope you will use Bulgor Wheat as often as possible since Bulgor is versatile in cookery and is usable in every course and every meal of the day. Bulgor is one of the few natural foods that can be used in all types of dishes.

INTRODUCTION BY LEX SCHRAG

Bulgor is very good to eat but hard to spell. It is a preparation of wheat that was discovered so long ago it was mentioned in the Old Testament. From the Eastern end of the Mediterranean to Pakistan it is a staple food of many sturdy people. Each race has a slightly different name for it: Bulgor, Bulgur, Boulghour, Burgul, Burghoul.

No matter how it is spelled, Bulgor is a nourishing food which can be kept for years without deterioration. Used in traditional recipes of Eastern Europe and the Near East, it makes highly appetizing meals of low cost, it is unexcelled as a meat "stretcher".

Years ago, Bulgor was prepared by boiling out of doors in hugh kettles. The whole kernels of wheat were cooked until the starch was turned to jelly. Then the grains were spread to dry in the sun. They had to dry in one day for if they were left overnight, they might mildew.

Once the grain was dried, however, it would remain wholesome for years. A part of bran was removed by rubbing; the dried Bulgor could of course, be cooked much more quickly (and was VERY much easier to chew) than the whole wheat kernels.

Now, with modern methods, Bulgor is prepared under complete, scientific control. The finished product retains high percentages of the minerals and vitamins in the raw wheat. Almost equally important, it tastes more like wheat than the grain from which it was made: rich and nutty. According to laboratory tests of Department of Agriculture "Bulgor" has more food energy than corn meal, more iron than rice, less fat than regular wheat and corn meal, six times more calcium than corn meal, about three times more calcium than rice, also more vitamins than rice, barley or corn meal.

ROYAL SOUP

1/2 gallon chicken broth	1/4 cup finely chopped parsley
1/2 lb. ground lamb, not too lean	3 eggs
1 cup Bulgor wheat (fine)	juice of 2 lemons
1/4 cup very finely chopped onion	salt and pepper

Mix raw meat, Bulgor wheat, onion, parsley and seasoning together, and knead well, adding water a little at a time until mixture is smooth (about 10 minutes). Make mixture into small balls about the size of cherries, drop them into the boiling chicken broth and cook for 15 minutes. Beat eggs thoroughly adding lemon juice while beating. Then slowly pour the soup broth into the egg and lemon mixture, beating constantly, until all the broth has been used. Pour over the balls and serve immediately.

ARMENIAN STYLE LENTIL SOUP

1/2 gallon water	2 medium onions
1/2 cup Bulgor wheat	1/2 teaspoon dry mint or
1/2 cup chopped parsley	1 tablespoon fresh mint
1/4 cup butter	salt and pepper
1/4 cup unpeeled whole lentils

Put lentils in water and bring to boil. Keep it boiling for 15 minutes. Add Bulgor wheat, one onion sliced, parsley, salt and pepper, and cook for 20 minutes on moderate heat. Meanwhile chop the other onion and fry in butter until light brown. Add mint 2 or 3 minutes before it is done, and pour over: mix and serve hot.

SCOTCH BROTH WITH BULGOR WHEAT -- 6 to 8 servings

2 1/2 quarts water	1/4 cup snipped parsley
2 pounds lamb shanks	2 to 3 teaspoons salt
1 cup diced or shredded carrots	1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/2 cup chopped onion or leeks	1/2 teaspoon curry powder (optional)
1 cup sliced celery	2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 cup Bulgor wheat	4 tablespoons flour

Simmer lamb shanks in water 2 to 3 hours, then remove meat and bones and skin off all fat. Add Bulgor wheat, carrots, onion or leeks, celery, parsley, salt and pepper, and curry powder, cover and continue cooking until vegetables are tender, 15 to 20 minutes. Remove meat from bones dice and return to soup mixture. Blend together over low heat butter and flour. Slowly stir in about 2 cups of the soup mixture, then stir into remaining soup mixtures. Continue cooking until thickened, about 3 minutes.
